THE NEWSPAPERWOMAN

THE halls of Richfield High School were silent, the rows of lockers empty and the late afternoon sun shone dimly through the large windows at each end of the corridor. The noise and bustling footsteps echoing through the halls in the daytime had left no trace, but Stan listened very hard. Sure enough, there came the faint sound of a typewriter clacking. Stan followed the noise, and in his tennis shoes, he didn't make a sound as he padded around the corner and came face to face with the door marked "School Newspaper . . . Keep Out . . . This Means You!"

He opened the door quietly and found just what he expected.

"Aw, for heaven's sake, Louise, I waited for exactly one hour at the drug store and you didn't show up for our coke date. I had a hunch you were here!"

He had expected loud protestation of apology, or anything in fact but the reception he got. Louise didn't even turn around. The noisy typing didn't even stop for an instant.

"I said, you didn't show up!" Stan walked around to Louise and put his hand over the keys so she couldn't type even if she wanted to.

"I know I didn't show up, silly. I was here typing all the time." Louise, for the first time since he had entered, looked up at him . . . and, as usual, one glance from those cool blue eyes absolutely melting all his anger.

"What's so important you have to break a date with me to come up here and type?" Stan asked hopelessly.

"Well," Louise shifted around in her chair and started to talk seriously. "You know this issue of the paper had to have an editorial . . ."

Stan nodded in resignation. He'd heard this story every week since school had started.

" . . . and I got a terrific idea for one just as I started to meet you. And I just couldn't let it go until I'd come up here and gotten it all down on paper."

"I suppose not," Stan agreed helplessly. "But all I want to know is, out of all the slick chicks in this school, why do I have to pick one that's a crusader?"

"A newspaperwoman," Louise corrected quietly, turning back to resume her typing. "There's just one more paragraph . . . be a dear and wait for me, won't you, Stan?"

"And what's this one all about?" Stan asked.

"This is the best one yet," Louise smiled, but that smile was one that seemed to say, "I know I've started something, and I'm glad."

"OK, shoot," Stan invited.

As Louise picked up her books and started to leave with Stan, she told her story. "Now you know that you wear blue jeans all the time to school."

"I know that," Stan answered, still in the dark, "and so does everybody else. What's so newsworthy about that?"

"That's just it . . . women have equality with men in every other field in modern times, why shouldn't she be allowed to dress like a man too?"

"You do," Stan said simply. "Every time you get home from school, and all day Saturday you wear blue jeans too."

"But why must I be forced to wear a dress to school?"

The full import of her conversation finally struck Stan like a ton of bricks. "You mean you want all the girls to wear jeans?"

"And why not?" Louise looked up into his eyes and smiled sweetly. This time it didn't melt Stan at all.

"Because you're a girl, that's why!"

"Girls take their places beside their men everywhere in the world today. There's no reason why we shouldn't have the advantages of comfort and equality . . . to say nothing of the cleaning bills."

"You mean you wrote all that in that editorial?"

"Of course," Louise said gaily. "And won't it cause quite a stir when the paper comes out in a few days?"

Her last remark was quite an understatement. When the paper did come out, everyone, both students, faculty and parents were talking about the same thing. The students were split pretty evenly down the middle, but the faculty and parents gave their unqualified "No" to the whole scheme. The matter probably would have ended right there if Louise hadn't been quite so determined.

When Stan met her after school at the drugstore one afternoon, she was sitting with her chin in her hands, an attitude that Stan could only construe as "reflective."

"I know from experience," he said to her, "that this attitude of yours can only mean that something's definitely cooking. Let's have it."

"I don't think that anything's going to be done about my idea that girls wear jeans to school," she told him.

"This is a foregone conclusion," Stan said between sips of his soda.

"What I should have said," Louise amended, "was that nothing's going to be done about it unless I follow the editorial up with a little action!"

Stan nearly choked. "Now what's in your so-called head?"

"Yes," Louise seemed to be in the middle of a trance. "I think a petition might do it." She turned to Stan suddenly. "After all, we learned all about petitions in American History class, didn't we?"

Stan's eyes narrowed. "If you go on with this crazy idea," he delivered his ultimatum, "we're through. It's either jeans or me . . . take your choice."

"Much as I value our friendship, I feel that the cause of women's equality is more . . ."

Stan didn't even wait to hear the rest of her speech. He knew whatever she said would leave him absolutely nothing to reply. As he banged the drugstore door shut, he muttered, "Newspaperwoman . . . humph!"

Stan would be the first one to admit that he sort of lost track of events about that time. Every time anyone would mention Louise's name after that, he'd turn the other way. Every time anyone would push a petition under his nose and hand him a pencil and ask him to sign, he'd bite his lip and walk away. But with or without Stan's knowledge or attention, things seemed to happen anyway . . . and this is how they did.

After Louise left the drugstore, she walked back to the editorial offices of the school paper. Quickly, she wrote off a few stencils of petitions, then walked down to the printshop and had them run off on the machine. By the morning of the next day, Louise and a few of her chosen friends had circulated them throughout every class. During lunch time, Louise slipped into some jeans, and stood in the cafeteria, collecting name after name on the long slips of paper.

"It's only the democratic way of doing things," she'd tell everybody. "C'mon, kids, show your opinion counts . . . add your name to this list."

Before long, she had collected over half the names of the students in the school. Then she was ready to really go into action. After she had collected all the petitions, she marched into the dean's office . . . jeans and all.

"Dean Petty . . ." she started, in a very businesslike voice. "I feel there's something you should know about our students . . ."

"And I feel there's something you should know about especially one student, Louise," the Dean said, and motioned for her to sit down.

Louise was taken so by surprise that she did sit. The dean took a slip of paper out of his desk and pushed it over to her.

"This is yours," Dean Petty said. "It's the mid-term grades."

Only one look was needed. The three "incompletes" looked bigger to her than all the petitions in the world.

"I'm afraid you've been going a little overboard on this 'newspaperwoman' idea . . . not that we'd discourage the idea," the Dean added. "It's a good idea for everybody to know what they want and try to get it through the proper channels."

Louise felt terrible. "I didn't realize how behind I was getting in my schoolwork," she tried to explain. "I knew I hadn't completed a few assignments . . . but . . ."

"More than a few, Louise . . . but luckily for you, not too many to make up if you spend a lot of time doing what you're here for . . . schoolwork."

Louise had to admit this made sense to her. So it wasn't surprising that when Stan finally walked into the paper's office a few weeks later and inquired about Louise, he was told that she had quit the staff.

"Y'know," Louise told Stan later, "being a newspaperwoman isn't really a bad idea!"

"I know," Stan smiled.

"But I just think I'll wait a few more years," she laughed.

COMPLETE 4 PIECE MATCHED SET OF LUGGAGE

Unbelievably
Priced at ONLY $2.98

Yes, that price is correct . . . Only $2.98 for the complete 4 piece set. Not $2.98 each, but $2.98 complete for all 4 pieces. And, there is nothing else to buy . . . no extras, no additions, its modern appearance and wide-stitched simulated leatherette material will amaze you with its good looks.

IMPORTED AND MASS PRODUCED TO MAKE THIS PRICE POSSIBLE
This tremendous bargain is possible only through the use of pressed chip-board. This wonderfully versatile material bends around three sides and is bonded by sturdy wide stitching to the overlapping closing. Snap locks and handles are riveted in place. The big one has extra metal stripping for strength and long wear. Inside has laminated modern design print. Each piece fits inside the next larger which saves your storage space and makes out shipping easier.

NOT FANCY LUGGAGE — BUT USEFUL, PRACTICAL
You will be thrilled and delighted with the many, many uses you will find for this set. It will make a marvelous gift and your thoughtfulness will be appreciated for such a long time. Lightweight. It avoids the silly situation where the luggage weighs more than the clothing carried. When this offer was first made to us by the overseas company we couldn't believe our ears, but we were delighted when we saw it just a few days ago—and you will be too. Each piece serves a specific purpose such as vanity and cosmetic case (8"), personal valet (10"), overnight case (12") or family size (14").
